

Temperance Bar

The temperance movement began in Preston in 1835 during the period of the Industrial Revolution and was a response to the widespread alcoholism that existed at that time. The availability of cheap ale and gin had been responsible for the breakdown of family life and industrial productivity amongst the working classes. Prohibition was never legalised here but non alcoholic bars began to appear in every town and village to promote abstinence from 'the demon drink'. The movement started and continued to blossom in the textile districts of Yorkshire and Lancashire, but quickly swept across the whole of the UK. It was a Methodist cheese maker born in Preston, who set about establishing a society under which a pledge of sobriety was taken. The society grew and expanded beyond the churches to become part of every day life for the now sober British! Temperance bars had become the new social scene.

Cask Ale

At the Albert we like to do things right, which is why we have six wickets on the bar for a huge variety of cask ale. It is one of the best tasting, most satisfying drinks in the world when served in good condition. Made from four wholesome ingredients (so it must be good for you!!) water, malted barley, hops and yeast, it isn't fizzy or over-creamy because it has no added gas. The light sparkle, or 'tingle on the tongue' in cask ale is from carbon dioxide produced naturally during the fermentation process. Most importantly of all, unlike keg products cask ale is a product which can only be experienced in its full glory in the pub. Enjoy....!
